

ABSTRACT

Water is mixed with a hydrate-forming fluid (gas or liquid) within a pressurized, temperature-controlled continuous-flow reactor. Intense mixing of the hydrate-forming fluid with water forms many hydrate-encased water droplets of hydrate-forming fluid which are then allowed to consolidate into a solid-like hydrate/hydrate-forming fluid/water material.